Foreword

General market sentiment suggests that there has been a slowdown in secondary market deal activity in the first half of 2016. One estimate – from Greenhill-Cogent – has total market volume at $12bn in the first six months of the year, which represents a 20% decrease from total volume in the first half of 2015. Macroeconomic shocks, such as the slow start to the year by the S&P 500 and growth fears in China, tend to have an adverse but temporary effect on secondaries deals, with sellers adopting a wait-and-see approach as reported NAVs catch up to these shocks. Fundraising dynamics certainly suggest that this slowdown will be short lived, and the mid- to long-term prospects for the secondary market remain positive if the amounts being raised by secondaries vehicles are commensurate with the available opportunities for secondaries deal making. The $18.5bn raised by secondaries funds in the first three quarters of this year is more than has ever been raised at this stage of any year by secondaries funds.

Secondaries managers are confident in the opportunities that exist (the average size of vehicles is $1.2bn), as are the investors backing them. The more than fourfold increase in the total amount raised by Strategic Partners Funds Solutions for its latest dedicated real estate secondaries vehicle compared to its predecessor highlights the growth in opportunities for that particular section of the secondary market. There is a further $32bn being sought by all secondaries managers still raising capital, from 44 vehicles, which is more than ever before as new managers enter the space to take advantage of the perceived opportunities.

Fundraising

In Q3 2016, eight secondaries funds held a final close, securing an aggregate $3.8bn and bringing the total raised by secondaries funds in 2016 so far to $18.5bn (Fig. 1). This is the highest total amount ever raised by secondaries funds at this stage of the year, an indication of strong investor appetite for secondaries.

In total, 15 secondaries vehicles have held a final close in the first three quarters of this year, compared with nine funds closed at the same stage in 2015. The average size of secondaries funds closed in 2016 thus far is $1.2bn, slightly lower than in 2015 but higher than in previous years (Fig. 2).

The largest fund to close in Q3 2016 (and the third largest in 2016) is Strategic Partners Fund Solutions' Strategic Partners VI RE, which raised $1.3bn (Fig. 4). Strategic Partners Fund Solutions is one of a handful of managers that raises capital for dedicated real estate secondaries vehicles; this is the first dedicated real estate secondaries vehicle to close in 2016. Its predecessor closed on $300mn in 2012 – this fourfold increase in size may suggest that investors and fund managers perceive greater opportunities in the real estate secondaries market.

Funds in Market

There are 44 secondaries vehicles seeking capital as of the start of Q4 2016, which is more than at any point in the past five years (Fig. 5). These funds are targeting aggregate capital of $32.3bn. The relatively large number of funds on the road is a combination of managers returning to the market following fundraises in 2014, as well as new managers entering the space in a sign of a maturing market. These include primary fund of funds managers seeking to raise capital for their first dedicated secondaries vehicles, such as Siguler Guff, Abbott Capital Management and GCM Grosvenor Private Markets.

As shown in Fig. 6, funds seeking less than $1bn represent 61% of secondaries funds in market. However, funds seeking $1bn or more represent more than two-thirds (76%) of the aggregate capital being sought. Over half (55%) of the number of funds seeking capital are managed by North America-based managers, as shown in Fig. 7. The largest secondaries vehicle currently in market is Strategic Partners Fund VIII, which is seeking $5.5bn, as shown in Fig. 8.

Performance

Secondaries funds typically provide accelerated cash flows, and this is typically borne out in the IRR measure of performance. Only one fund (2012 vintage) has returned a negative IRR in the last 10 years (Fig. 13). Overall, just three secondaries vehicles are returning a negative IRR – one per cent of the total number of secondaries funds Prequin has data for – illustrating the minimized risk associated with secondaries investments. Indeed, the median secondaries vehicle has delivered double-digit IRRs from vintage 2007 onwards. As shown in Fig. 14, secondaries funds compare favourably with other strategies in IRR terms, with secondaries funds exhibiting a higher median IRR compared to other major fund types in funds of vintage 2010 and older. In terms of net multiples delivered, secondaries funds have consistently delivered higher median multiples compared with all private capital funds (Fig. 15).

The 10 largest secondaries managers by uncalled capital have a combined $54.8bn left in their funds (Fig. 16). While some of this capital will be used by these managers to fund calls in existing investments, it suggests there is potentially significant capital available for new investments.
